The pathogenesis of the hemodynamic abnormalities in the syndrome of pulmonary embolism is believed to be primarily due to increased pulmonary vascular resistance and a decrease in cardiac output. Recently it has been shown that the plasma concentration of atrial natriuretic factor (ANF) increased in patients with congestive heart failure and that ANF induces vasodilation and natriuresis. The authors therefore measured plasma ANF levels in patients with the syndrome of pulmonary embolism by using a specific RIA. Plasma ANF levels were markedly elevated in 22 of 28 patients with the syndrome of pulmonary embolism (range, 92.3 to 603 pmol/liter) compared with the levels (2.0 to 4.7 pmol/liter) of normal control subjects. By contrast, plasma renin activity and angiotensin II levels were increased in only three of the patients. These results suggest that the hemodynamic abnormalities in the syndrome of pulmonary embolism are at least partly due to the increased plasma levels of ANF, which therefore plays an important role in the pathogenesis of the syndrome of pulmonary embolism. Is it possible to do this using data from Landsat or the Sentinel project? I understand the images only go back as far as 1997 but they don't go far enough to be useful for seeing forest coverage. Any advice? A: I don't know about the "Sentinel project" but you can download free Landsat images from anywhere in the world, see This is an example of Brazil, but you can download as much data as you want, as long as the area requested is not classified as a national park, a protected area or other national, state or local reserve. This area is populated (presumably in the last few years) so it has been classified as INVISIBLE. I believe you have to be a US citizen or a permanent resident to download. You can also use this calculator to figure out what you need to request. Q: swift 3.0 Error: expression is unused [-Wunused-expression] I updated a project from swift 2.2 to swift 3.0 in Xcode 9.0.
